

Figure 6. The speedup gave memory back.

The GEMV path allocates no per-call partial reduction buffers, so peak reserved memory fell by 1.93 GiB while throughput rose 3.18 times. An earlier version of this figure claimed the opposite, because it was drawn from the pre-fusion engine where preallocation and graph capture had bought speed with memory.

Source: engine/kernels/RESULTS.md

32 GiB cap

